FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Kenneth Brecher Appointed President of Library Foundation of Los Angeles

Kenneth Brecher, a leader in the arts and culture community, has been named President of the Library Foundation of Los Angeles, the non-profit organization that supports literacy, educational, cultural and technology programs of the Los Angeles Public Library.

Reporting to the Library Foundation Board and working closely with City Librarian Martín Gómez, Brecher will manage all Foundation activities and staff.

“We are excited to have a leader with such passion for libraries and reading,” said Jeff Brown, Chairman of the Library Foundation. “Ken brings to this post a broad intellectual background and extensive experience with innovative non-profits across the United States. This is a challenging time, but it is also a time of great opportunity for the Foundation to build on its success and support one of the world’s great libraries.”

Brecher’s appointment is effective February 8, 2010. He succeeds John Cooke, who served pro bono as interim President during the nationwide search for the position. Cooke is a founding board member and chairman emeritus of the Library Foundation.

“I look forward to working with Ken and building on the extraordinarily successful relationship between the Library and the Foundation,” said City Librarian Martín Gómez. “In these challenging economic times and with library use at record levels, funds raised by the Foundation through its generous supporters are more important than ever before.”

Brecher was a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University and is an anthropologist by training. His previous positions include President of the William Penn Foundation, Director of the Boston Children's Museum and Associate Artistic Director of the Mark Taper Forum.
